In addition, the Reduce Noise feature now attempts to prevent images from losing fine details and gradations in the shadows and highlights for sharper, more realistic results. However, noise-reduction can cause streaking and other visual defects in the image, especially at the lower end of the sample range. The Film effect has also been discontinued. Photoshop now uses Exposure, Contrast, Saturation, and Black point to create the core adjustments for color correction. Another major change to art is the new algorithm to remove artifacts from the new noise reduction. Similar to other parts of the application, the algorithm is intended to remove noise while preserving fine details. This algorithm is one of Photoshop's three new algorithms (the others are Red Eye and Reducing Noise). The new tool is much more pronounced than the others. Red Eye discards less, and the other two are meant to fill in the gaps for most images. Irrespective of which algorithm is used, setting the enhancement to High is an effective way to get the most from Photoshop's new noise reduction tool.
